DEKRA supports companies in crisis management. In the wake of the challenges surrounding the coronavirus pandemic, the international expert organization now offers an extra website www.dekra.com/crisis-management that includes advice and additional services. The objective is to properly assess crisis situations and take countermeasures. Furthermore, DEKRA provides extensive support with experts in occupational health and safety.

The requirements in a crisis situation present companies – regardless of their size – with a variety of challenges. This is currently evidenced by the coronavirus pandemic. Effective crisis management includes the identification and analysis of the crisis situation as well as the development of strategies to manage the crisis. What is required is the interaction of risk management, crisis management, and business continuity management.

In order to be better able to handle worldwide crisis situations, the DEKRA experts have gathered information and tips on the coronavirus pandemic on the new website www.dekra.com/crisis-management.

DEKRA also provides extensive support to companies in Germany through the branch network, with services focused on people and health: first and foremost, occupational health and safety, occupational safety, emergency psychology, and hazardous substance management.
